Noize Bathhouse was a pre-launch branding project for a club-style bathhouse set to open in Sydney in 2027. As no photography or finished venue assets existed, AI-generated imagery was used to explore and establish the brand's visual direction. Inspired by the reflected movement of a mirror ball, the distorted logotype and vivid orange-red palette connect the energy of nightlife with the heat of the sauna. The project defined the look and feel across social media, campaign content and future brand touchpoints, creating a cohesive visual foundation ahead of launch.

*All imagery on this project was AI-generated.

The social media campaign applied the brand's imagery, typography, colour and messaging as one consistent visual system.

AI-generated launch visuals established the intended direction, to be replaced with real venue photography after opening.

Each execution prioritises clear messaging and conversion-focused layouts over visual decoration alone, supporting stronger CTR and ROAS across paid social campaigns.

BRAND/ COMMUNICATION DESIGN

Client	Various Clients AU/NZ
Project	Brand Identity & Communication Design
Role	Senior Designer / Brand Designer
WJD*	Editorial Design, Brand Identity, Visual Systems

*What Jamie did

Selected projects demonstrating clear visual communication across editorial design, brand identity and commercial applications.

Created twice yearly for presentations to ALDI Australia, this proposal brochure organised a wide range of products into a clean and easy-to-navigate document.

Product imagery supplied by different factories varied in angle, lighting and style, so each asset was refined and arranged to create one consistent visual presentation without distracting from the key information.

Built around the Golden Kōwhai, New Zealand's unofficial national flower, the identity combines delicate botanical illustration and calligraphic lettering with restrained serif typography.

The contrast balances natural warmth with premium refinement, creating a distinctly New Zealand brand without feeling overly traditional.

Led the project end to end, creating the brand identity, packaging, social media strategy and campaign assets for a Wu-Tang Clan vodka and liqueur range released across Australia and New Zealand with Live Nation USA.

The visual system combined Wu-Tang Clan's gritty aesthetic with bold flavour-led colour coding, making the collaboration and individual products instantly recognisable.
